

Unique Food Careers

Food Stylist: Food Stylists are responsible for arranging food so it looks tasty and presentable. These pictures may be featured on menus, cook books, magazines, etc.

Clinical Dietitian: Clinical Dietitians determine patients nutritional needs and develop a healthy eating program. These patients may be overweight, diabetic or have other health issues.

Food Scientist: Food scientists create new food products or improve existing ones. They must adhere and enforce to government food regulations

More Food Careers

Public Health Educator: Public Health Educators provide information to the public about certain health issues. They can specialize in topics such as nutrition and other healthy eating habits.

Food Bank: Work for a local food bank or soup kitchen that provides food to people who cannot afford it or on part of the SNAP program

Non-Profit Organizations: Organizations such as GardenShare support the local food systems by helping low- income families become connected with the local farms and farmers markets.

Food Careers and Volunteerism

WWOOF

(Willing Workers on Organic Farms)

Work on an organic farm for about a half day in exchange for food and board. These farms are located all over the United States and internationally. Sign up online for each specific country for a small fee and receive access to all the farm listing. Volunteers can stay on farms for a couple of day- several months depending on the host.

For more information please visit wwoofusa.org or wwoofinternational.org

Peace Corps and FoodCorps

Peace Corps:

A 27 month commitment to volunteer in developing countries. Volunteers can focus specifically on agricultural issues such as agroforestry, sustainable farming and food justice in certain countries.

Volunteers receive $8000 dollars after service is completed and have unique graduate school opportunities.

For more information please visit peacecorps.gov

Food Corps

A domestic program designed to connect kids to healthy food in schools. Volunteers commit one year of service, working along side local school districtis, at one of 15 sites across the country.

Volunteers receive over $5,000 to help pay off student loans or graduate school.

For more information please visit foodcorps.org